I grew up in a darkroom with black and white photography sitting on a high chair, then graduated to slides and in 2008 finally joined the digital age. It has been an interesting and fascinating journey. When I look back at my life's work, nature has always been the primary topic. Though my interest is all of nature photography, wildflowers and landscapes are my real passion.

Recently, with the creativity that digital encourages, I have become passionate about iPhoneography and other non-nature photography. I am enjoying making abstracts and painting with my camera, breaking down an image into its colors and shapes.

Lately, the night sky has become my passion. Modern cameras make it possible to share the night sky with people who have never paid attention to it. My personal project is photograph Rappahannock county at night under the stars and help inspire the people who live here to keep the skies dark enough to see the stars and the Milky Way.
