

Photographer Jo Levine is a juried member of two artists' cooperatives -- the Middle Street Gallery in Washington, Virginia, and the Studio Gallery in Washington, DC. She is also represented by Dwell Fine Art, a private art gallery in Hume, Virginia. She has presented solo or two-person shows at all three galleries, in addition to being selected for numerous juried group shows throughout the greater DC region. Her work also has been recognized with awards from distinguished jurors.

An art critic for the Washington Post described her 2021 show, Discoveries, as “a vision of perfection,” and the art critic for the Washington City Paper said that her show “suggest[s] Dutch Golden Age paintings.” The same City Paper critic previously called her photo, Rites, one of the five “best photographic images exhibited in local museums and galleries in 2018.”
