

Alexia Scott:

Gardens are not always serene. Fall brings anxious activity and greed to garden visitors. I study wildlife, their seasonal habits, and their interactions. I am fortunate to have woods behind my studio but live in an urban environment inside the DC Beltway. However, our property is a National Wildlife Garden and is home to everything.

Everything, I enjoy studying and painting. Complex structures in Nature are a favorite. It is always intriguing to hold on to the sense of design of the picture plane, loose enough to handle an abstract quality and complicated enough to hide a narrative that is not seen all at once.
